When someone is impacted by the loss of a loved one, they often seek bereavement leave in order to take the time necessary to grieve, coordinate affairs, and attend to the many logistical and emotional needs that arise in the aftermath of a loved one’s death. Many in Massachusetts may be surprised to learn in their time of grief that they have no legal right to bereavement leave. Grief and loss is something that impacts all of us. The time is now for Massachusetts to guarantee bereavement leave for all!

Why Bereavement Leave?	Who’s Impacted?
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>❖ The loss of a loved one is the most common traumatic event to disrupt work and life.</li> <li>❖ Taking time to grieve a loved one, and respond to affairs in the aftermath of a loss, should not come at the risk of losing one’s job.</li> <li>❖ The Family Medical Leave Act (FMLA), provides job and benefits protection for 56% of the United States workforce; however, bereavement is not an eligible condition for both job or wage protection.</li> <li>❖ Bereavement is not a sickness or a vacation, and employees should not be required to use up other benefit time after the death of a loved one.</li> <li>❖ Bereavement leave is currently at the employer’s discretion.</li> </ul>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>❖ Bereavement Leave is less likely to be granted to non-salaried workers and workers in the service industry. This disproportionately impacts low-income workers, workers of color, immigrants, and workers with low English proficiency.</li> <li>❖ Hourly wage workers - who are less likely to receive benefits - make up 44% of all workers aged 18-64.</li> <li>❖ Low wage workers and non-salaried positions are disproportionately occupied by women, people caring for children, and single parents.</li> <li>❖ Employees that work for small businesses are less likely to receive additional benefits.</li> <li>❖ Guaranteed bereavement leave benefits both the employee and the employer.</li> <li>❖ Families who experience traumatic loss and non-anticipated death are uniquely impacted.</li> </ul>
